B. Grammar: Past and Present Write this paragraph in the present tense.

1066 was an important year in English history: two kings died, William the Conqueror led the last successful invasion of England, the world's most famous comic strip was created and French became the legal language of England for the next 400 years! When Edward the Confessor, the king of England died, Harold Godwinson became king. But William, Duke of Normandy (and Edward's cousin), said that Edward had promised him the English crown. He started constructing ships and organising an army to invade England. Harald Hardrada of Norway decided to invade the north. So, King Harold marched the English army north and defeated the Norwegians. At the same time, William arrived in the south. When he heard King Harold was on the way, William made camp at Hastings to prepare for the battle. It was a difficult battle but finally, Harold died and William won. He was crowned king in London on Christmas Day.
